Swallowing disorders have been identified by various studies as being common in leukaemia patients. However, few studies have evaluated the prevalence of oropharyngeal dysphagia (OPD) in these patients. The aim of this study was to review the literature and provide an overview of the current understanding of OPD in leukaemia patients. A systematic review was performed in PubMed, Scopus and Web of Science. An electronic search was conducted from inception to June 2015. One-hundred and sixty-nine articles were reviewed, resulting in 25 studies being included in the review. The studies evaluated the prevalence of OPD in leukaemia patients (71 studies), OPD management (14 studies), and OPD patient characteristics (10 studies). The majority of studies showed a prevalence of OPD of 40-67 %. In particular, the prevalence of severe OPD (in terms of penetration or aspiration, with or without the need for management) ranged between 5-40 %. Associated factors with increased risk of OPD were older age, stage of the disease and treatment (a single, or multiple cycles), and excessive weight. There is a high prevalence of OPD in leukaemia patients and associated factors, but there is insufficient evidence about the efficacy of therapeutic management. The findings of this review provide good evidence for the need to implement swallowing assessment and interventions for leukaemia patients.Q: Better python implementation of Wave Given a file (the contents of this file follow the c8 example, except with a postamble) C8 For more information and examples on the f678ea9f9e
